○授業の到達目標及びテーマ

This class is aimed to teach the basic knowledge on foreign policy through the history of foreign policy analysis, theory, analytical frameworks, and case studies.

○授業の概要

This is a class on foreign policy history, theory and analytical frameworks at the introductory to developing stage. The first part explains the basic history and theories, including realism, liberalism and constructivism. The second part instructs the analytical framework, including important decision makers and their interaction, decision making models, implementation and behavioral pattern, the role of the media and public opinion. The third part introduces national security, economic policy and global issues. The fourth part will student presentations. If we have enough number of students, we may introduce the board game of diplomacy.

○授業の方法

- 1) The class is conducted in English.
- 2) Students are required to read all the reading material, and actively participate in the class discussion.
- 3) In the class, the lecture is offered in accordance with the chapters of the main textbook, and students are required to participate in the discussion.
- 4) Students must pick up a case study from the text book, and present it in the week 9 in order to learn how to write your original case study.
- 5) Students must write report paper of 3,000 words, and make a presentation in the class (week 15).

Final paper is on a case study. Students needs to pick up a country or a region, and choose specific foreign policy case like the cases in the text book. Use one of the foreign policy analytical tools which instructed in the class.

Adjustments may be made due to the class size.
